Good Distribution Practice (GDP) - Health Care Logistics

Good Distribution Practice (GDP) refers to the EU directives issued for the distribution of pharmaceutical products.

Logistics and distribution in the pharmaceutical sector are no simple matter. Guaranteeing product safety and quality is of crucial importance for the pharmaceutical industry.

Transport always takes place under particularly strict conditions and the medicines must arrive at their destination in the best conditions: on time and under constant temperature!

At the same time, the storage and handling of pharmaceutical products must be carried out under optimum conditions with special attention to the identification of "counterfeit" products. These not only present a safety risk, they can also damage the image of the producer.

Obtaining a GDP certificate therefore requires a well-considered approach and can take the necessary time: from documenting tasks and responsibilities, to defining effective processes to demonstrating results.
