Q4 2015

Union Customs Code

The new Union Customs Code will enter in force on 1 May 2016. This will have far-reaching consequences on different aspects, such as electronic declarations or inward and outward processing, but certainly in the field of AEO (Authorized Economic Operator).

Although AEO remains a non-mandatory program, companies will no longer be able to appeal to certain customs processes without the AEO certificate.

This includes:

- transport of goods in temporary storage between Member States
- centralised clearance
- exemption from the obligation to physically present goods to the customs officers, provided that a number of additional conditions are met
- work with self assessments for customs controls
- reduced deposit for the use of a customer's account for the payment of import duties

In addition, many customs permits will only be granted when a number of, or even all AEO requirements are met. This will actively encourage obtaining the certificate.

De Putter & Co follows with particular attention the latest developments of this standard. We are always at your disposal for any further information regarding this subject.

Operationele audit for Vervoer Verhaegen

An operational audit, performed by an external partner who analyses and assesses the processes in order to obtain company objectives, gives the management an objective insight in the organization.

This is exactly what Vervoer Verhaegen had in mind when they appealed to the vast expertise of De Putter & Co. Throughout the years, Verhaegen became a renowned distribution company. The occupation of a brand new distribution and processing center in Lier is a new milestone in the company's history. In line with this growth strategy, they called on the consultants of De Putter & Co for assessing the existing organization and its processes. They organized interviews and observation sessions with the employees of different departments (management, HR, warehouse, planning, administration). These interviews and perceptions led to recommendations for the improvement of the company's development.
